

Andrew Weathers

They Turned the Heat On

While Andrew Weathers is an accomplished experimental touring musician & just got his master's degree in electronic music from Mills, probably most Silber fans know him as the estranged biological son of Brian John Mitchell (Remora, Small Life Form). He'll always be part of the Silber story as long as the drone blood runs in his veins.

Struggling with where he wanted to go with his banjo playing, heading towards technical expertise associated with academia while yearning towards the inspiration & improvisation that is essential to art, the recordings on They Turned the Heat On blend the two goals as one. The pieces are all improvisation with a tuning taken from Dock Boggs recorded sitting on his bed in California waiting for the heat to be turned on in hopes of warming his fingers. So take a five minute break & listen to a banjo freak out in a way you haven't heard before.

For distribution & direct ordering information contact:
silberspy@silbermedia.com

For booking & interviews contact:
andrewweathers@gmail.com

silber records
po box 18062, raleigh, nc 27619, usa
<http://www.silbermedia.com>

